

Computer-Aided Design

One of the leading international journals in the field of computer-aided design and related fields.

Computer-Aided Design is an established international journal that provides engineers, designers and computer scientists in academia and industry with key papers on research and developments in the application of computers to the design process.

Computer-Aided Design invites papers reporting new research and novel or particularly significant applications within a wide range of topics, including:

- CAD in conceptual design
- Design automation and optimization
- AI in design
- Geometric methods and applied computational geometry
- Surface and solid modelling
- Parametric, constraint-based, and feature modelling
- CAD interfaces to testing and analysis, including finite-element methods
- Design and planning for manufacturing, including numerical control, rapid prototyping and robotics
- Design and planning for assembly, maintainability, recycling etc
- Engineering data management and exchange, including design databases, component selection, product models, and life-cycle modelling
- Space and facilities planning and layout
- CAD user interfaces, including computer graphics, virtual and augmented reality
- Significant benchmarks, APIs, formats and standards in CAD

Contributions are acceptable across a wide range of disciplines, including:

- Mechanical and production engineering
- Civil engineering, architecture and building
- Industrial and aesthetic design

Notes for authors are printed in the journal, and our "Guide for Authors" is available online at the journals web site <http://www.elsevier.com/locate/cad>.
